Cancer And The Lgbt Community
Cancer and the LGBT Community
There are approximately 1 million LGBT cancer survivors in the country today. This is based on the common estimate that approximately 4% of the population is gay, lesbian, bisexual and/or transgender and that this population is overrepresented among cancer survivors. Nearly every doctor has LGBT people as patients.

While very little cancer research has focused on the LGBT community, cancer may affect this population at different rates and in different ways than their heterosexual counterparts. A 2011 study in the journal Cancer found that gay men who responded to the California Health Interview Survey were nearly twice as likely as straight men to be cancer survivors.
